Franklin Bosstos

Franklin Bosstos was born in Ecuador and is currently based in Mexico City, where he pursues his career as an actor and model. With a profile deeply sensitive to art and committed to the transformative power of performance, he maintains continuous training and a constant dedication to honing his skills, driven by the firm conviction that art is vital to bringing people together through empathy and love.

In theater, his participation in early 2025 stands out, playing the role of “Octavio” in the independent play Promesas, directed by Víctor Naranjo, a stage experience that was key to his development. In the audiovisual field, he has consolidated his versatility by participating in various commercials and student short films, in productions such as Cómo acaba (Dir. Sergio Canul), Salario mínimo (Dir. Bren Galmoz), Baño escarlata (Dir. Santo Bravo), and Metamorfósame (Dir. María Aguilar). His work is distinguished by a constant search to touch the sensibility of those who observe him, transform emotions, and leave an authentic mark on every story he interprets.

“For me, acting is not just a profession, but a way to feel alive, to transform emotions into stories and connect with others through them. I am drawn to acting because I am drawn to life, and to feeling alive.”
